Female Scribes finish writing Torah Scroll

By Sue Fishkoff

SAN FRANCISCO (JTA) -- It took seven years to write and just a few days to sew together, but on Oct. 15 the first Torah scroll written entirely by a group of women was attached to its wooden poles and declared complete. The ceremony was held at Seattle's Kadima Reconstructionist Community, which sponsored the project.

"We had the idea 10 years ago, but when we looked around for women scribes, we realized there weren't any," said Kadima member Wendy Graff, one of the volunteers who shepherded the project from its inception. To remedy the dilemma, Kadima supported two women as they trained to be scribes. Four others trained on their own. Ultimately the six female scribes, or sofrot, worked on the scroll in four countries: two in Israel, two in the United States, and one each in Brazil and Canada. The panels were checked by experts in Jerusalem and New York, who made the minor tikkunim, or corrections, permitted by Jewish law. Major errors require a complete redo of the page.

Last week the panels were flown to Seattle, where another group of women sewed them together. The Torah mantle, including wooden poles, or atzei chayim, and other traditional accoutrements were created by seven local artists.

The scribes were paid, but the others who worked on the project donated their time.

According to Orthodox tradition, women are not permitted to be Torah scribes.

Over the last decade, however, a handful of women have trained as scribes. It's an exacting process. Torahs must be written by hand on parchment made from the skins of kosher animals, and scribes must state their intentions out loud each time they prepare to write God's name.

In September 2007, Jen Taylor Friedman of New York completed the first Torah scroll known to have been written by a woman, for the United Hebrew Congregation of St. Louis, Mo. Friedman

Apologies, dear friends. Moving office has been so all-consuming of my time, that I have not been able to write a message this month. By next month, my life should be back to normal.

A Message from the President of the James Bay Community Project

As Chair of the Board of Directors, I wish to take this opportunity to sincerely thank you for your support of the Project. So many people lend their support selflessly tpo us in so many ways each and every year, whether through financial, food or clothing contributions, volunteer services and more. You are all deeply appreciated.

I thank you in advance for your ongoing generous support. We are hoping that you will give a little more this year if you are able to do so, as every extra dollar makes a significant difference!

Sincerely,

John Vickers, Chair

Editor's Note: this letter was addressed to our Social Action Chair, Reva Hutkin, care of the JCCV, because he really wanted us to know how much they appreicate our continuous donations of food and clothing. Thank you to everyone who regularly contributes. Please keep the donations coming.

Scribes, Continued from page 1. advised the Women's Torah Project and was one of the experts who checked for small errors. She is among a number of women at work on other Torah scrolls, including Julie Seltzer of San Francisco, one of the six scribes on the Seattle project.

Seltzer wrote four of the Seattle Torah's 62 panels in the summer of 2009, when she was living in New York. Since October 2009, she has been writing a Torah scroll at the Contemporary Jewish Museum in San Francisco as part of the yearlong exhibition, "As it is Written: Project 304,805."

Rabbi Jane Writes

Apocalypse Not Now

As we approach the end of 2010, it's interesting to note that it was not a particularly active year in terms of geological activity. Experts say it's about average. Though it seems as if every week there was a major disaster - and I certainly don't want to minimize the suffering of the people of Haiti and Chile and Iceland – this perception is the result of changes in the dissemination of information rather than a fundamental geologic change. Both the international news media and the fiction producing movie industry feed on the perception of impending doom.

Though disaster hysteria is on the rise, it's nothing new. Some people think the first signs of the Apocalypse were seen in the year 2800 BCE. That's the date of an Assyrian tablet that proclaims the end of civilization as they knew it, due to degenerating morality. But the Jewish Apocalypse - the one adopted by Christianity, the one that is so dear to certain parts of North American culture - didn't emerge until after the destruction of the First Temple in Jerusalem in 586BCE. It was after this event that the prophet Ezekiel foretold of the future return of the Jewish people to Israel, and the violent destruction of their enemies. The prophet Isaiah built on this tradition with details about the resurrection of the dead and the cosmic significance of the end of time. Later Jewish books such as Enoch and Daniel fleshed out the revolutionary eschatology with visions of wild monsters and great beasts, cataclysms and uprisings that mark the Apocalypse.

From Ezekial until today, I imagine that in every generation some people have asked, "Is it now? Is this the end?" So far, the answer is no. There have been plagues and wars, famines and deluges, but up until now, no Apocalypse. That doesn't mean it won't happen, just that we want to be a bit skeptical about its immediacy. The Jewish historical experience of survival even survival of horrific tragedy - tempered eschatological yearnings. Rabbinic Judaism became increasingly pragmatic: sooner or later the end of days will be here, but it's important to take care of matters on earth now. We pray for the Messianic Era to come "speedily and in our days," BUT according to our Sages, "If you are planting a sapling and you hear the Messiah has come, first finish planting the sapling, then go to greet the Messiah." (Avot d'Rabbi Natan 8:31)

I was watching the Daily Show and John Stewart implied that this year's natural upheavals could be seen as the hand of God, a harbinger of the last days. I think he was mostly kidding, but his humor reflects not only the ancient Jewish tradition, but also the contemporary belief system of many fundamentalists, replete with bestselling books featuring life after the "Rapture." Many people believe the world is coming to its end, and soon. They point to world events, to supposed Mayan prophecies, to the situation in the Middle East, the fall of Communism and even the establishment of Israel, as signs of the Apocalypse.

Normative Judaism has rejected Apocalyptic ideology because it is a form of denial of reality. The reality is that even in the very worst of times, life goes on. This is a challenging time for Canada and the world. The war, the economy, the environment, the moral fabric of our society are important issues that we must engage positively and pragmatically. They don't have easy solutions, and they aren't going away. It is sometimes tempting to throw up our hands and say,

ω

EVOICE November 2010 Cheshvan-Kislev 5771

Rabbi Jane, continued from p.2 "Civilization as we know it is ending - the ethics of our society are unsustainable." But that didn't help in Assyria five thousand years ago, and it doesn't help now. Rather the Jewish wisdom is anti-Apocalyptic: "It is not up to you to finish the task, neither are you free from engaging in it." and For Jews, change is a gradual apocalyptic one. It comes about step by step, through unceasing engagement with moral values. So though we continue to pray for the coming of the Messianic Age, it's more important to plant the saplings in our hands.

Jane

Scribes, continued from page 2. realized, however, that she would never complete the scroll by her December 2010 deadline, so Seltzer writes mainly at home now and spends several days a week at the museum talking to the public.

"Jewish learning and text was my entryway to Jewish practice and spirituality, and continues to be one of the primary ways I connect," Seltzer told JTA, saying she feels honored to be able to write a Torah scroll. "To be this close to the text, on the elemental level of the letters, is extraordinary." Conclusion page 5.

Did you know that we have provided you with an opportunity to commemorate important events in the lives of your family and friends? Our Chai Fund appears in the Newsletter every month and contains the names of the donor and the occasion. These can be "Thank Yous," messages of condolence, good wishes for weddings, Bar/Bat Mitzvahs, anniversaries, birthdays, appreciation or anything you find noteworthy. A card will be sent by us on your behalf to the person(s) you wish to honour. Chai Fund donations are a great way to raise much needed funds for our Congregation, and are tax deductible.

All you have to do is send a cheque to the Treasurer, made payable to Kolot Mayim Reform Temple. It may be left in the Kolot Mayim folder at the JCC, or mailed to Kolot Mayim Reform Temple at the JCC of Victoria, 3636 Shelbourne Avenue, Victoria, BC, V8P 4H2.

Donations received during the past month:

- Arline Parrish
- Carole Sterling of the CRJ, Toronto
- Jacquelene and Sheldon Seigel made a donation to buy materials for our new Sukkah.

Scribes, continued from page 4. Seltzer says she doesn't feel that her experience writing a Torah is any different from a male scribe. But the fact that her Torah, and the one completed by the Women's Torah Project, were written by women means they will not be accepted for use in Orthodox congregations. On her website, Hasoferet.com, Friedman tells female scribes they need to be upfront about that when they are commissioned to work on a Torah.

"Why is a soferet like a swordfish?" she writes. Swordfish, she says, is not considered kosher by most Orthodox Jews, although Conservative Jews will eat it. "If I repair a Torah and then let Orthodox congregations use it," she wrote, it's "an appalling desecration of trust. If we want respect, as Jews or as human beings, we have to give respect, and part of that is accepting that other Jews' rule systems are valid despite being different from ours."

Wandering Jews

Reva and I travelled to Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal in September/October to visit friends and relatives on both sides. The only complaint we had was not enough time! Too many friends and too many relatives! We had lunch and dinner with different people every day! We most certainly left without wearing out our welcome, but we will definitely have to plan a longer trip next time!

A couple of things we did were of Jewish relevance —one in Toronto, and one in Montreal, and I thought I would tell you a bit about them here. In both cases, we just happened to be in the right place at the right time!

In Toronto, we were invited to a concert and reading at one of the oldest shuls in the city the Beaches Hebrew Institute. It is in a beautiful, real wood panelled building very close - as the name implies - to the beach. Unfortunately, we did not get to see the Ark, as that area of the shul had been closed off due to the secular nature of the event we attended. But the sanctuary was beautiful, and a very warm and welcoming space.

Semmy Stahlhammer, a renowned Swedish violinist, and his wife, an equally accomplished cellist, treated us to a beautiful concert, punctuated by Semmy's readings from his book, Codename Barber, the biographical tribute he has written about his father's experiences during the Holocaust. Following the concert, Semmy signed copies of his book, and gave each purchaser a CD of Swedish music as well. Mr. Stahlhammer seemed very gentle and soft spoken man, who put his entire sould into his music, and I'm sure, into his writing as well. Reva reports that it was a good read.

After a brief stay in Ottawa, we found ourselves in Montreal in time for Simchas Torah. We were invited to the local reconstructionist temple there independently by Reva's friends, Continued on page 8.

The Victoria and Vancouver Island Jewish Burial Society

The Jewish Burial Society of Victoria and Vancouver Island is a service organization founded to assist all Jews with end of life requirements. We administer four totally separate and distinct sections in the Hatley Memorial Gardens and provide space for all persuasions of Jewish life from orthodox to secular, complete with cremation if specified.

The Society works with the Victoria Chevrah Kadisha in preparation of the body for burial, and works with the family in all ways to ensure that the bereaved person feels the embrace and concern of the entire community.

While we are a non profit Society, regretfully, end of life does not respect one's pocketbook, and costs are dear. There is a small membership charge that must be paid to become a member of our Society, and arrangements for this, and for burial requirements may be made at any time. We recommend dealing with one's self and saving the pain and expense of the survivors at a very stressful time.

Wandering Jews, Continued from page 6. and by a friend of mine, as well. We were very surprised to discover that they knew each other as all are members of Dorshei Emet.

I was expecting to find a very small shul, as until meeting Rabbi Jane, I had never even heard of the Reconstructionist movement. But it's obviously been around for quite a while, at least in the East. This shul was quite large, with a beautiful sanctuary and at least six Torahs – all of which were paraded and danced around the sanctuary with such nachas. I have never witnessed such a sight, let alone been part of such a joyous ritual.

There were Torahs of kidding! - but the "star" of Torat Imeinu which had been Emet as a women's Torah, smaller and lighter, and scribe (Soferet). Not only raffle with the winners being the actual Torah: either hand over the soferet's or would hold the quill with The experience was further

It was from this Torah that the last verses in the yearly cycle were read. It was this Torah that was ritually rewound, and it was from this Torah that the first verses of the cycle were then read. Everything was accompanied by great ceremony, ritual, and of course, honours. It was definitely a gift to behold, and to be a part of this momentous occasion.

There were musicians and dancing, and the torahs were passed around. Even I got to dance with one of them! This was an event such as I have only ever heard about. Following this wonderful ceremony, there was a dinner in the community hall, and yet more music!

Two wonderful evenings of yiddishkeit. Thank you Beaches, and thank you Dorshei Emet, and to our friends who invited us. We hope that some day, you will come and join us for a service or an event at Kolot Mayim.

Reform Movement Responds to Homophobic Bullying

The Union's resources on bullying about all issues, harassment and sexuality created for congregations, teens and parents - are already being used by congregations throughout North America. It is grounded in Jewish texts and tradition and includes information on dealing with virtual and viral bullying, a primer for LBGT inclusion in Jewish communities, an anti-bullying pledge, information on Help Lines, programmatic resources, advocacy initiatives and more.

JCCV Cookbook – a resounding success!

On October 17th, a sizeable crowd came to the JCC to launch their new cookbook, Nosh...by Gosh! People were treated to delicious samples prepared from some of the actual recipes in the book. The event was beautifully coordinated by Assistant Editor, Diana Shnider, who was aided by a very hard-working crew of volunteers.

The cookbook project was spearheaded by JCCV Treasurer, Ethel Chochinov as a fundraiser for the Centre in the hopes of replacing some of the funds lost when the BC Gaming Commission withdrew their support. It was designed by Julie Elizabeth.

300 copies were printed, and before the first week was up, they were all but sold out! A second printing will make more books available in time for Channukah giving. Don't miss out on getting your copy!
